Chapter 1 by The Book of Stories

Marcus let out a long sigh as he headed into his new house. He had been living in it for two weeks now, and he had cleaned up everything, and all the insects that infested the house.

The old house was considered haunted, since the owner of the house tested on creatures and such. The scientist had died from overdosing a dog, and it had jumped on him and killed him.

However, Marcus would not believe any of the rumors of organisms becoming humans. It was foolish.

Yawning, Marcus went to the kitchen to make some tea. When he finished, he put sugar in his tea.

Marcus turned around, spying a spider web he had forgot about. Spinning around an the web was a black widow.

Unlike any average human, who would normally freak at this poisonous spider and kill it, Marcus took a piece of sugar and slowly put it on the web, making sure not to tear the black widow's beautiful web.

When Marcus took a few steps back, he saw the spider was eating the sugar, eating it happily.

Five days later

Marcus had been feeding the spider sugar, crumpets, bread, candy, and anything classy. It was quite a fun hobby to do when he goes home.

Marcus is sure that the spider was female, so he called her Spinella, because it always spinned when he fed her.

One day, Marcus came in with honey cereal for Spinella. He put the cereal on the table so he could put it in a bowl for her.

When he looked up, he saw the prettiest girl ever with a black tank top that was covered with a black and white jacket. She had a bulky red belt that hung by her waist with black shorts. The girl also had striped socks that went up to her hips.

Her face was extremely gorgeous, and her black short hair was complemented with red dots that covered some of her hair.

This strange girl was eating sugar cubes I had given her before.

Spinella.

"Hallo!" The girl said with a mouth full of sugar. Marcus said nothing. Instead he turned and got a bowl for the cereal and poured it into the bowl. That was when he chose to speak to the girl: "Spinella?" He mumbled.

"That's me!" The girl said happily,.

"I see..." The boy replied, confused.

"Is that for me?" Spinella motioned to the overflowing bowl of cereal. Marcus Nodded and pushed the bowl towards Spinella. Spinella began to eat and Marcus watched her.

I Don't believe this is exactly normal. Thing like this don't happen every day... He thought. Spinella quickly finished the cereal and smiled at Marcus. That was when he noticed a small black bag that hung over her shoulder. She opened it and dipped her hand into the bag. When she took her hand out it was coated in a thick, sticky, brown substance. She walked over to her web and began spinning. The fluid spread out over the web making it larger and more detailed. She took her time in spinning. I watched her

What is going on... Since when did spiders have the ability to become humans? He thought to himself. There was a knock on the door and he went to answer. This is when he learned that It wasn't just spiders that were becoming human.
